Omnis Global Bond Fund Investment Manager Market Review Quarter 1, 2018

Schroders

The Fund outperformed its benchmark during the period. Despite volatility in bond markets mid-quarter, our currency, country and duration strategies positively contributed to performance. Our view that global growth would remain robust and central banks would continue to normalise policy was expressed through US positions that profited as bond markets priced in higher inflation and US Treasury yields rose.

In January, we introduced credit protection positions to reduce credit risk exposure. We downsized and took profit on these positions in February but continued to hold them in the portfolio. They helped to offset negative performance resulting from our exposure to credit.

We expect global growth to remain buoyant, so continue to have a positive view on credit. We continue to prefer peripheral Europe to Germany although we express this view through Spain rather than Italy, where we are concerned about political uncertainty and structural issues. The gradual normalisation of monetary policy, rising inflationary pressures and continued (geo) political risks have increased volatility. Given a robust growth outlook, higher volatility is not anticipated to cause widespread disruption in risk asset prices, however in our view this environment should favour active investment decisions as opposed to simply investing in the market.
